Seven leading academic experts on corporate governance issues have prepared “21st Century Governance and Audit Committee Principles for U.S. Public Companies.” The principles update the guidelines the academics published five years ago, in the wake of the Enron bankruptcy and widespread governance and financial reporting problems at U.S. public companies – “The 21st Century Governance and Financial Reporting Principles” (March 2002). “The five-year anniversary seemed like a good time to review these principles – five years after Congress passed the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002; the New York Stock Exchange and NASDAQ proposed and later adopted new listing requirements; the AICPA issued SAS No. 99; the accounting fraud at WorldCom led to the largest bankruptcy in history; and Arthur Andersen LLP, Enron’s long-time auditor and one of the nation’s Big Five accounting firms, collapsed,” said Paul Lapidès, Director of the Corporate Governance Center in the Coles College of Business at Kennesaw State University.

On March 26, 2002, in an effort to advance the current dialogue and to promote investor, stakeholder, and financial statement user interests, we issued seventeen recommendations, "21st Century Governance and Financial Reporting Principles" (see: <http://ksuemail.kennesaw.edu/~dhermans/principl.htm>). The principles were written by Corporate Governance Center co-founders Paul Lapidès (Director) and Dana Hermanson (Director of Research), and Corporate Governance Center Fellows Mark Beasley (North Carolina State), Joseph Carcello (Tennessee), Todd DeZoort (Alabama), and Terry Neal (Kentucky). Within 48 hours, these recommendations were endorsed by the Institute of Internal Auditors (IIA). The IIA presented our recommendations to the New York Stock Exchange (NYSE) and sent them to national and local legislators, the SEC, and White House staff assigned to address these matters.
